

How much do you “like” the MJA?

A status update on tweets, podcasts, prizes, news ... and some darn good research

One of the joys — and one of the problems — of a socially oriented online world is the range of publishing possibilities and demands that modern medical journal editors now face. As the MJA approaches its 100th birthday, how do we take advantage of this new environment, while maintaining the long-standing quality and integrity of Australia’s most respected medical publication?

This year, developing our electronic presence has been a major task. After many months of “back office” slog by our dedicated web team, we launched our new website (<http://www.mja.com.au>). The old site was showing its age, having evolved from hosting the occasional unadorned article in 1996 to full content online from 2002. A decade later, our purpose-built site can be considered the definitive MJA. We look forward to adding more functions in the near future to the ones you interact with now.

Another initiative has been the launch of MJA OPEN, an online-only, open-access general medical journal (<http://www.mja.com.au/open>). Currently, the site hosts high-quality peer-reviewed supplements; next year, we plan to expand the model to include more general content.

We hope you have taken some time to listen to our regular podcasts throughout the year. You may have also noticed us on Twitter, generally pointing to substantial MJA content but also hosting the odd forum; garnering “likes” on Facebook; and discussing medical news on MJA InSight (<http://www.mjainsight.com.au>).

This expansion has not compromised our high standards in content and editorial process. As the accompanying statistics show, submissions are up and decision times are down. Our new system of rapid editorial handling of “pitched” abstracts and outlines is also proving popular (<http://www.mja.com.au/journal/mja-instructions-authors-submitting-article-mja>).

Important debates on our health care system and the medical profession regularly play out in the MJA. Our semi-themed issues on many subjects — infectious diseases, pain medicine, psychiatry, gastroenterology and oncology, in addition to our established general practice and Indigenous health issues — are intended to enhance these important conversations.

We have also enjoyed administering our ever-expanding suite of competitions, including two new prizes — the MJA Dr Eric Dark Creative Writing Prize and the MJA, MDA National, Nossal Global Health Prize — as well as the MJA, MDA National Prize for Excellence in Medical Research and the Dr Ross Ingram Memorial Prize. Stand by for dates and details of next year’s prizes in the January 2013 issue.

The MJA depends on talented and committed partners who generously give of their time and effort. Our peer reviewers (listed on the following pages) continue to impress with constructive, detailed and erudite advice. Our Content Review Committee members and our Specialist Editorial Advisers are our eyes and ears in the clinical and academic worlds and help us keep up to date with new developments in the medical and surgical disciplines. To ensure the quality of published research, the MJA’s Consultant Biostatistician, Associate Professor Elmer Villanueva, now joins us at our weekly research manuscript meetings. Dr Leah Kaminsky — as Deputy Editor, Poetry and Fiction — infuses a little bit of magic to curate our creative writing contributions and, like our international peers, to maintain the MJA’s presence in the medical literary world.

In May, and after two decades’ service of dedicated, unsurpassed quality, our longstanding stalwart, Senior Deputy Editor Dr Bronwyn Gaut, moved on for a new career in medical informatics liaison. It is impossible to imagine an MJA without Bronwyn, and we continue to call on her for advice when difficult questions arise.

The MJA is currently under interim editorship. The Australasian Medical Publishing Company board is now seeking expressions of interest for a new Editor to take the MJA to its 100th birthday in 2014 and beyond (page 651).

In 2011, Queen Elizabeth II unexpectedly impressed even information technology aficionados when she reportedly bought an iPad (she bought an iPod a few years ago) after her grandsons let her try out their devices. Similarly, as the MJA approaches its centenary, we hope that our initiatives continue to reach out to the medical community in new, surprising and productive ways. Like 21st century grannies everywhere, the MJA is fully herself, fully wired and ready for anything.
